The University of Highlands and Islands Project (UHI) is a bold and distinctive educational enterprise to create a new university for the region for the new millennium based on federal collegiate principles. It will be built upon a partnership currently comprising thirteen colleges and research institutions and serving a local population of nearly half a million people dispersed over an area nearly one-fifth of the UK.

UHI aims to achieve university status by the year 2001, but is set to offer its own curriculum and undertake research activities well before that date.
