On 1st August 2007, the University of Paisley and Bell College merged to create Scotland's biggest modern university to become the University of the West of Scotland. With campuses in Ayr, Dumfries, Hamilton and Paisley, over 18,000 students and almost 2,000 staff, the University is unique in its geographical coverage across the West of Scotland.

The University of the West of Scotland encourages and develops research activity across a wide range of disciplines and it is recognised for its high quality work in fields ranging from Nuclear Physics, Thin Film Technology, Environment & Human Health and Neurovascular research.

Specific areas of research expertise currently include: Business, Computing, Education, Engineering & Science, Health, Nursing & Midwifery, Media, Language & Music and Social Sciences.

The University prides itself in having a long standing tradition of industrial partnership and advancement of knowledge. We are here to help industry, commerce and the public sector benefit from the University's research expertise, either through collaboration or the transfer of our knowledge via various initiatives, consultancy and licensing.
